

Inclusion of Refugees in TVET Self-Assessment Tool

WHAT is it about?

The Inclusion of Refugees in TVET Self-Assessment Tool is a practical and easy-to-navigate instrument for carrying out a systematic analysis of a country's approach to refugees' inclusion in TVET. It enables the tracing of progress in this area over time in a specific country or across different countries.

HOW does it work?

The tool contains fields to describe a country's overall refugee context alongside a series of check-box questions to assess how suitable the country's TVET provision is for refugees, based on the availability of services, their accessibility for refugees, acceptability to refugees and adaptability to refugee circumstances.

We encourage more than one interested party to conduct the self-assessment (either separately or together) in order to validate responses and to spark constructive debate where there are differences.

WHOM does it target?

The tool is aimed to help any interested party, such as government representatives, training practitioners, researchers, international development agencies, NGOs (particularly in the field of refugees, human rights, education and skills) to:

- Understand high-level factors that influence whether a country's TVET provision works well for locally hosted refugees
- Assess countries against those factors
- Access initial information on how to improve

WHERE was it used?

The tool was initially used as part of a comparative study involving Ethiopia, Jordan, Pakistan, South Africa and the UK. The results of this study are captured in a report – ‘Inclusion of Refugees in Technical and Vocational Education and Training: An Exploration into Funding, Planning and Delivery’, also available on the VET Toolbox website.

LIMITATIONS

As with all self-assessment tools, the value of the assessment in the tool is dependent on the accuracy of the data submitted. The refugees in scope for this tool are those aged over 16 who have been granted official refugee status by the government of the host country or UNHCR. The tool does not seek to cover other displaced groups such as asylum seekers (i.e. those who have applied for asylum/refugee status but have not yet had the decision) or Internally Displaced Persons.
